TEXT:

/LP, /TX AN Israel-US partnership could help create a Middle East common market, Israel Electric Corporation chairman Gad Ya'acobi told delegates at the Israel-North America Business Conference in New York yesterday.

/TX In his address to US, European and Israeli officials and businessmen, Ya'acobi presented four regional energy projects either already being implemented or under discussion.

* Connecting the electricity grids of Jordan, the PA, Israel and Egypt. Grids have already been constructed between Eilat and Aqaba.

* A canal linking the Red Sea and Dead Sea, in which the Jordanians are very interested.

* A resultant hydro-electric power station to produce 400 megawatts of electricity for Israel and Jordan. A feasibility study is about to start.

* The development of an oil-shale plant (Israel's only proven fossil fuel resource) is about to begin. Mid- Atlantic, the American consortium created specifically for this project, won the franchise from IEC to produce 150 MW of electricity at a predetermined sale price. Israel is now offering to cooperate with Jordan in building further such plants in both countries.

These projects and others involving solar and wind power could also be implemented in the region, according to Ya'acobi.

"Regional cooperation is the foundation for peace and its reinforcement," Ya'acobi told delegates. "It has to be expressed in many other areas, such as agriculture, tourism, transportation, telecommunications, joint ventures in industry and R&D."

Ya'acobi and other Israeli speakers are hoping to use the conference to raise some $50 billion for public and private sector projects here over the next 10 years.
